intensified in preparation for the formal and full inauguration of the Grand Egyptian Museum (GEM) which has been designed to emerge as the displayer of the largest collection of more than 100,000 artefacts representing the richness of the ancient Egyptian civilisation.

Simultaneously, the state has put in action a multifaceted plan for the development of the areas surrounding GEM, especially including the Giza Plateau zone, to facilitate tourist movement to and from the great cultural heritage edifice. The Sphinx International Airport has also been constructed to support the expected growth in the volume of tourist traffic to follow the opening of GEM to the public. In a step to offer tourists and visitors easy and fast access to the many sites of attraction, the national carrier, EgyptAir, has bolstered domestic interconnectivity and introduced new routes to and from more cities abroad. Viewed together, these measures that have been initiated over the past few years actively contribute to building the tourism sector's capacity to handle such a marked increase in tourist traffic as projected by world travel websites and businesses.

secrecy, the US president has stated earlier that those who committed war crimes in Ukraine must be held accountable. "President Biden was so eager to be specific by referring to those who committed war crimes in Ukraine and nowhere else in the world. Otherwise, he would be raising the same charges against some former US presidents."

The writer counted the many war crimes the US committed against Iraq since 1991 when 88,000 tonnes of explosives – equivalent to seven nuclear bombs similar to the one dropped on Hiroshima – and 6,000 depleted uranium shells were deployed in Iraq.

Plague of coups

Baria Alamuddin

HARDLY a single state across Africa's vast Sahel region has escaped the curse of coups in recent years. With Niger the latest victim of this pandemic of military mutinies, destabilisation of this obscure state will have profound consequences for Africa and global security.

Just a few weeks ago, an African security analyst contextualised Niger to me as a "precarious success story." In neighbouring Mali, Burkina Faso and northeastern Nigeria, extremist groups have been expanding across vast swaths of territory – yet Niger, meanwhile, witnessed a marked decline in significant terrorist activity. President Mohammed Bazoum was voted into office just two years ago in Niger's widely celebrated first peaceful, democratic transfer of power since independence in 1960.

Next door in Mali, two coups in quick succession around 2021 fundamentally destabilised the country, bringing forth a pro-Russia regime that demanded the withdrawal of all Western counterterrorism forces. This was, predictably, a disaster, as Daesh and Al-Qaeda flooded into the gigantic vacuum created by the departure of the foreign troops. Civilian and military deaths have soared, amid hundreds of reported security incidents every month.

In the aftermath of Mali's coups, Russia's Wagner Group mercenaries made matters 100 times worse by perpetrating horrific massacres, which drove communities into the terrorists' open arms. A further 2022 coup in Burkina Faso enabled extremists to take de facto control of about 40 per cent of the country.

As recently as 2021, Daesh's Sahel branch was ramping up its activity in Niger, building up a substantial presence among tribes within the country's western Tillaberi region, a
